Words Matter: Cultivating Communication & Identity Equity

Language matters. How we talk and write about even mundane topics adds context and framing to any discussion. The importance of language is even more critical when navigating sensitive topics, including those involving race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, and gender identity. Engaging in these diversity discussions also provides an opportunity to display the fluidity of language in action – the ways in which teams evolve and groups choose new ways to self-identify.

Lawyers must be able to bring their whole selves to the profession and lawyer leaders need to be culturally and identity competent to drive sustainability goals in a changing legal community. This workshop will discuss ways to move from good intentions to a concerted effort to cultivate identity equity within the profession and within your organization.

This CLE is accredited for 2.0 General Credits, 2.00 EDI credits, 0.00 Ethics credits.

This workshop will cover the following topics:

- Equitable Language and Reframing
- The Glossary of Inclusion
- Asking About & Naming Identity
